2. Citations and explanations (Rule 70.7)

Reference is made to the following documents:

D1: US 5047728

D2: EP 0528413

D3: WO 9705695

The single general concept (the requirement of unity of invention of the independent claims) of the application is the teaching of solving the problem of providing a network having low resistance for direct current and high impedance for alternating current by using an active load arrangement comprising a voltage-controlled transistor with an inductance feedback.

D1 comprises an amplifier having an active load with an inductor. The inductor is connected between the source and the gate. Furthermore, the inductance is connected between the source and the output.

D2 describes a gain control circuit comprising a coil between the source of a field effect transistor (FET) and the output (figure 2). The transistor serves as an active load.

D3 discloses an amplifier circuit including a FET as an active load. The use of an inductance between the source and the gate/output is shown in embodiments (figure 6, page 9, lines 21-25).

The single general concept of the two independent claims 1 and 4 is known from each of the cited documents. Although the cited documents do not describe active-load devices per se, it is clear that generating an active load according to the concept is known. Consequently, the concept is not inventive.

Claim 4 has an additional technical feature by stating a capacitance between the gate and the output. First, the feature is not part of the single general concept. Second, for a person skilled in the art it is known that (stray) capacitances are always present between connectors of components. Third, a capacitance connected between the gate and the output is known from for instance D2, figure 21.

Accordingly, the invention according to claims 1 and 4 does not fulfil the requirement of novelty.

The inventions claimed in the remaining claims 2-3 and 5-8 are considered to be general common knowledge to a person skilled in the art. Accordingly, the inventions according to claims 2-3 and 5-8 do not fulfil the requirement of novelty.

Box No. VIII Certain observations on the international application

The following observations on the clarity of the claims, description, and drawings or on the question whether the claims are fully supported by the description, are made:

Claim 4 is vague in stating the purpose of the invention. "To provide a proper DC output" is considered being merely a statement of desiderata.
